Raseef22 English

While Arabic remains our core language, a key strategic shift this year involves a stronger focus on commissioning content in English. This enables us to expand our reach beyond the Arab world and engage a global audience interested in the MENA region and its complexities.

Alongside our extensive Arabic content, we provide a growing selection of original English articles found nowhere else. These stories explore critical issues like the pursuit of freedom, socio-political barriers to democracy, access to information, and artistic expression. We highlight human experiences, often through compelling first-person narratives. Additionally, we translate key investigative reports, gender-related content, and environmental coverage to offer a holistic view of the Arab world, including its ethnic, religious, and gender minorities.

Offline Presence

In May 2024, Raseef22 hosted its first forum, 'Youth Not on the Margins: Towards Reclaiming the Narrative' to explore fact-checking and news verification, challenge digital censorship, and engage communities through participatory approaches in news production. The forum was held at the Asfari Institute for Civil Society and Citizenship at the American University of Beirut.

Youth and students from various Lebanese universities participated in the forum, forming working groups to discuss the rights of marginalized social groups. Topics included 'gender freedoms and sexual orientation,' 'physical and intellectual disabilities and access to services,' 'sexual and reproductive health and rights,' 'refugees, asylum, and equity in the health sector,' and 'combating the stigma around drug use.'

In conclusion, the results of the 'Youth: Not on the Margins' student writer competition were announced. Over 30 students from media colleges across various Lebanese universities participated, with the competition featuring training sessions led by journalist Hassan Abbas.

Imagining The Future

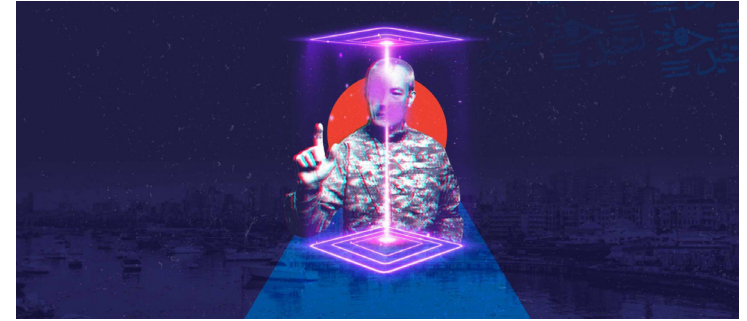

Raseef22 just celebrated its 11th birthday! The yearning for freedom, dignity, and justice that fueled the Arab Spring lies at the heart of our editorial vision. Over the past decade, the people of our region have faced a harsh reality check. Dreams of a brighter future have been overshadowed by conflict, violence, oppression, and even genocide. Yet, in the face of despair, Raseef22 refuses to let the flame of hope die. It remains true to its founding spirit.

That's why Raseef22 has launched 'Imagining the Future,' a project supported by The Ford Foundation. Recognizing a gap in discussions about the Arab world's future, this initiative will explore themes like inclusive cities, education reform, and gender equality. We're excited to engage writers, journalists, and activists in these crucial conversations.

Not On The Margins

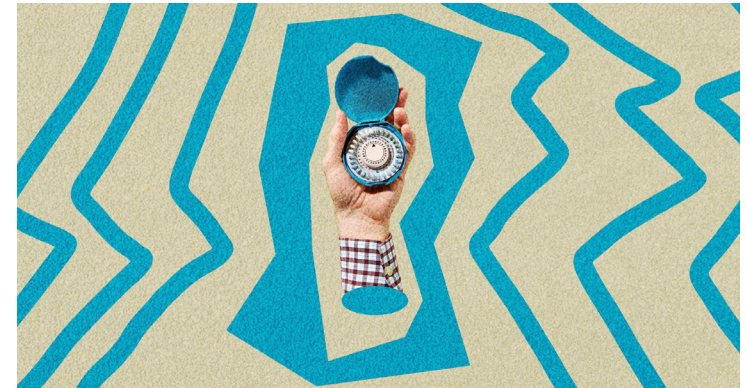

Despite the varying nature of the crises across Lebanon, Iraq, and Palestine, their impact on individual lives is strikingly similar. In Raseef22's 'Not On The Margins', we share scientific information about our bodies and rights, but our primary focus is on creating a space for real stories, in individuals' own words. We amplify the voices of women, refugees, members of the LGBTQIA+ community, migrant workers, people with disabilities, undocumented individuals, those living in poverty, which deepens their fears and further marginalizes them.

Some stories showcase the strength of societal bonds that transcend sectarianism and highlight successful challenges to the system, paving the way for a better future for Lebanon.
